Jewellery from Joyería Aquamarina Anthelia

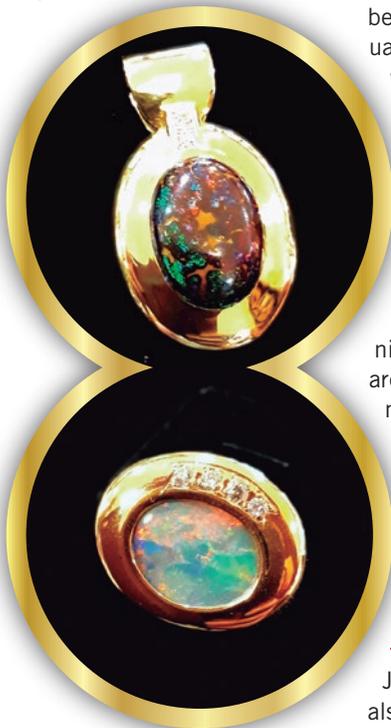

Joyerías Aquamarina jewellery shops have been serving customers on Tenerife for over 35 years.

Their lovingly handcrafted jewellery and unique own designs using natural gems are made in their very own workshop right here in Tenerife.

They have a large selection of precious and semi-precious gemstones, over 40 to be exact, and every year also bring stunning opals over from their own Lightning Ridge mines in Australia, for example the 'king of opals', the rare black opal, and white and boulder opals. The opal is first extracted raw from the mine, then washed and carefully sorted. After this process, the most beautiful pieces are taken for grinding, then the best shape for each individual stone is selected, always with the premise of attaining the greatest amount of colour as possible, then they are cut and processed by their goldsmiths here on the island.

Since they are the company's own mines, they can offer customers a significantly better deal, as they aren't dependent on middlemen and so have very marketable prices, sometimes even being able to offer better prices on opal than in Australia.

Discover their world of gemstones

Joyería Aquamarina Anthelia also offer beautiful pearl and gemstone necklaces, gemstone figures, knives, watches, and much more. Staff are always happy to advise customers individually and according to their wishes, and are able to speak various languages. Natallia, for instance, speaks eight different languages and will serve you using her usual professional manner.

Why not visit today and take a fascinating look into Joyería Aquamarina Anthelia's world of beautiful gemstones. ■

STRANDED ADVENTURERS SAVED Couple's beach horror rescue

Mid-January, a young couple, a 21-year-old man from Santa Cruz and a 22-year-old Italian woman, decided to take a trip in a rubber dinghy to the Playa de la Garañona in the borough of El Sauzal.

This beach is inaccessible by land and their excursion turned into a real nightmare. High waves and a strong coastal wind made the boat capsize several times and they only reached the shore with great difficulty. They had nothing with them except a towel and the swimsuits they wore and no mobile phone with which to make an emergency call. They still hoped that the waves would calm down and they could return by dinghy, but that was far from the truth. On the contrary, the ocean became even wilder and so they decided they would have to spend the night on the beach.

The next morning the young man searched in vain for a way out by land, as the sea conditions still didn't set fair for them to set off in the dinghy. Fortunately a Guardia Civil helicopter flew over the beach during a routine reconnaissance flight at around 11am. At first the officers thought they were being greeted when a young woman waved at them from the beach with a red towel, but when they realised that this section was inaccessible, they turned back. The young people were completely exhausted as they had neither eaten nor drunk since noon the day before. Above all, however, they were very cold. The officers wrapped them in their own uniform jackets to warm them up and urged them to retreat back up the beach because of the rising tide.

They were transferred to a safe landing site, where the officers had asked their colleagues to have warm drinks, food and blankets ready, so the young couple were welcomed and could warm up at the base station until a family member came to collect them. They will certainly never forget that night. Fortunately, they got away safely. A good reminder to always let someone know where you are going. ■
