

El Pris

Bajamar

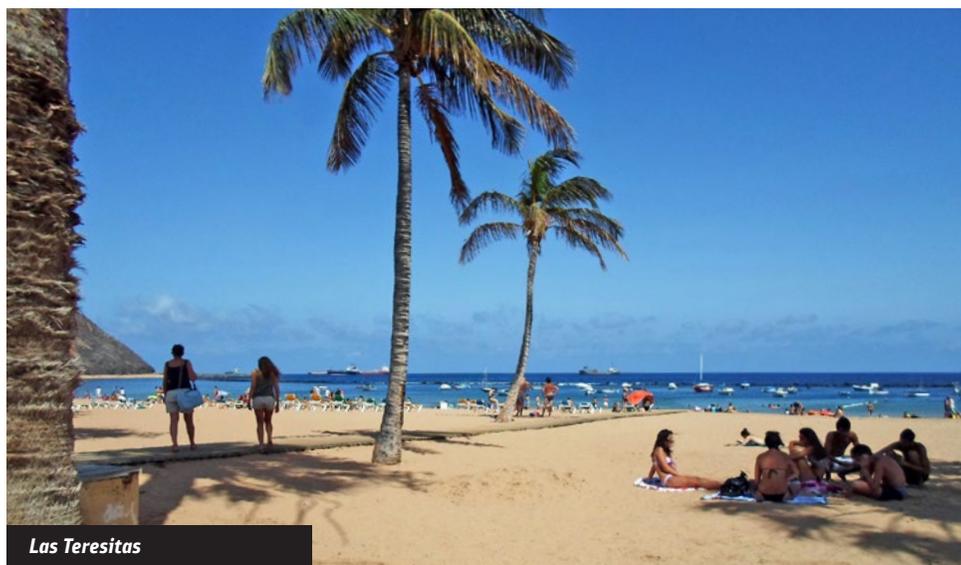

inevitably pass by the natural pool of Mesa del Mar. But less well-known is the counterpart in the fishing village El Pris that is right next to it. There, it is also possible to spend a wonderful day. By the way, at El Pris, one can also eat typically Canarian food and good fresh fish. El Pris has its own access road, but it is also enchanting to park one's car at Mesa del Mar and then take a half hour walk along the coast to El Pris. A little bathing, a little stop for a bite to eat, a walk back and a wonderful holiday day is already filled with beautiful memories.

Bathing in the Charco in Bajamar

The town of Bajamar on the coast of La Laguna experienced its best times in the then booming 70s. Since then, it's been a little sleepy, but some residents do believe in a revival of the dreamy little village at the foot of the Anaga Mountains. In any case, Bajamar is worth a visit and if you have your bathing costume with you, all the better. Just jump into the cool water. In this big Charco right in front of the coast you can even enjoy a good swim, in fact it offers perfect bathing fun for all ages.

Playa de Las Teresitas

Strictly speaking, the beach at Las Teresitas with its wonderful desert sand is of course not a natural pool. But due to the breakwater in front of the coast that is supposed to protect the sand, a huge pool has been created where the waves are only rarely high. It only has one disadvantage, on windy days the fine sand blows quite uncomfortably around the face and ears of sunbathers. Otherwise, this beach is suitable for a bathing excursion almost all year round.
